LACEFT

Infidelity is a frequent presenting concern in couple therapy. Emotionally Focused Therapy (EFT) conceptualizes infidelity as a type of "attachment injury" where a fundamental breach of trust inhibits a partner's ability to resolve an affair and potential long standing patterns of distance and distress. To address this, EFT provides a multi-step approach that has demonstrated empirical support in resolving attachment injuries and moving couples toward healing. This one day workshop provides a practical review of the assessment and treatment of these injuries using the EFT Attachment Injury Resolution Model (AIRM). The workshop will include video and case demonstrations illustrating key moments in the process or Attachment Injury Resolution, and therapist practices necessary for restoring healing and safety to a couple's relationship after an affair.

Participants will be able to:

- Identify characteristics of attachment injuries and their influence on couple relationships following an affair
- Identify attachment strategies and their influence on patterns of couple distress related to infidelity
- Conceptualize the treatment of attachment injuries through the empirically based Attachment Injury Resolution Model (AIRM)
- Identify EFT interventions and processes that enables couples to move toward healing from an affair.
